I Was Kidnapped by the Meteor Police!

"They Took My Baby!"
Cries Distraught Mom
By Emma Mae Neadrop
"Oh my God, that's no airplane," I screamed in my mind
as the weird ball of flashing lights landed on the hood of my 1974 Toyota.
My racing brain could only think how the thing looked like a great big vitamin pill with some thing like people inside. My lips started as I read the words printed where "A.1. vitamins" ought to be:
"METEOR POLICE!"
As I shook off my panic, I grabbed for my baby, but too late!
The slimy little creeps had him halfway out the backback! "Don't worry Mom, I'll be back," I thought I heard my little Myron shout, "and maybe I won't be purple any more!"
I've known Myron was special ever since that day four years ago (or was it five?) when I found him glowing in the back yard. He was like a tiny purple leechworm then, and so cute! But I should have known right then that little Myron wasn't like other children.
I should have known that he was going to have a weird life.
"Now when the other kids ask me where their special brother has gone, I just tell them to "watch the skies." Little Myron hasn't done anything wrong, and I know somebody he'll be returned to us!"

Artist's rendition of the tragic event.

Mysterious Plane Crash in Bermuda Triangle

Piercing, Glass-Breaking Noise
Blamed

A small twin-engine plane carrying what authorities described as "an agricultural cargo" from Central America crashed yesterday in the infamous Bermuda Triangle.

From his hospital bed in Miami, pilot Bruce Beaver told this reporter that he heard a piercing, high-pitched noise moments before the crash. "The noise started, then the instrument panel just sort of blew up and the windshield shattered," said Beaver. "All that glass breaking—it was just like one of those Edis Fitzgerald commercials."

The luxury cruise ship Bodacious happened to be in the vicinity under the plane's flight path at the time. Passengers reported the high-pitched noise and breaking glass on the ship. Many of the portable windows and all the chandeliers in the dining room were broken. "I'm simply shattered," exclaimed the Bodacious's social director Elena Glass.

Tornado Hits Trailer Park!

Loose brick is key to miraculous survival!

When Mrs. Roberta Simms heard that ominous roar and saw the funnel in the pea-green sky, she hardly had to think about what to do. Roberta grabbed up all sixteen kids and headed for the root cellar that her husband Bobby had built under their Aire-Stream trailer home.

"There's only one thing worse than a tornado," commented Mrs. Simms, "and that's being trapped underground with sixteen whiney kids." The family was trapped for seven hours while rescue workers moved the twisted debris above their heads.

"I could hear the rescuers but I was sure they couldn't hear me for all the noise those kids were making," Roberta explained. In desperation she tore away at the brick cellar wall with her bare fingernails. Finally, a brick came loose—the brick that would save her sanity.

"I whacked every one of those kids on the head with that brick," said Mrs. Simms. "That shut 'em up long enough for me to collect my thoughts."
By the time rescuers reached her, Mrs. Simms had achieved inner peace. The kids were treated for bumps on the head at a nearby hospital and released.

EDNA DEAREST: People keep breaking into my house. Last time they even stole the light bulbs. I am getting sick of it, but can't afford a burglar alarm. What can I do?

—Ripped-Off in Raleigh
DEAR RIPPED-OFF: I'll bet you are doing something dumb like leaving your key under the doormat. This is stupid. Hide the key some place where a burglar won't find it. Stick it behind a loose piece of insulation, or hang it from the ceiling fan! A burglar will never think to look for the key inside the house.

Teen Surfer Gets a Shock

Reveals Winning Lotto Numbers

Local teenager Jeff Woodie, known to his friends as "Surfer Dude," had a shocking experience at the pool last week. Jeff zapped himself by dropping his portable radio into the shallow water where he was standing.

The jolt was minor, but friends reported that Jeff was momentarily transformed. "He rattled off three numbers. And two of them were winners in this week's lotto!" said Jeff's pal Syd. "We thought the other number might mean something too," Syd continued, "but it just turned out to be the high score on one of the arcade games on the boardwalk. That's weird, but it probably doesn't mean anything."
Jeff doesn't remember talking about any numbers, but he enjoyed the experience. "It was a rush," said Jeff, "but my radio's shot."

EDNA DEAREST: I have a decorating problem. I cannot solve. I am so depressed. When I put my big new sofa in the living room I can't open the front door. What should I do?

—Depressed Decorator in Des Moines

DEAR DECORATOR: We are often plagued by unsightly and inconvenient doors. The solution is simple—just paint over it and no one will know it's there. Then your sofa will look fine.

EDNA DEAREST: My husband Chuck (not his real name) is kind, generous, and well-promoted. There's only one problem—he's a wimp. I mean a real ectomorph. I find this disgusting. What can I do?

—Hearthick in Hartford

DEAR HEARTSICK: When in doubt, find out! Simply steam it open. If he's fooling around, place your husband in the microwave! And let me know what happens—I care.

EDNA DEAREST: My husband Chuck (not his real name) is kind, generous, and well-promoted. There's only one problem—he's a wimp. I mean a real ectomorph. I find this disgusting. What can I do?

—Wife of Wimp

DEAR WIFE: That's easy. Get him a weight machine. A couple of good pumps and he'll be a new man.
